

Voice Clinic (Gender Affirming Services)

What is the Gender Affirming Voice Clinic?

This clinic provides an individualised program of voice and communication training for trans people. World leading researchers, skilled voice clinicians and final year speech pathology students support this service.

For more than four decades, voice research undertaken at La Trobe has informed clinical practice locally and internationally. This ongoing research keeps the Clinic at the forefront of new developments and ensures the service provided is based on research and client needs.

Voice and Communication Training

Voice and communication training consists of a series of components:

- Pre-training voice education
- Assessment.
- A block of 12 training sessions
- A break from training for self-directed consolidation of techniques
- Group days for those who want to practice their techniques with others.

Voice Education Information

Before attending our clinic, you will be invited to a group education day to learn important information to prepare your voice before starting training.

- Voice production
- The differing voice and communication characteristics we can explore in clinic
- Vocal health.

Assessing Your Voice

Assessment is completed prior to commencing training. It is important that your voice is thoroughly evaluated so that we can 'get to know your voice'.

The assessment session has three parts:

1. We will ask you about your transition, voice use, vocal health (habits that may affect voice), how you perceive your voice and what you would like to achieve from the voice sessions.
2. The speech pathologist listens to your voice as you speak and describes features heard such as loudness, pitch and overall quality.
3. Acoustic analysis involves audio recording your voice to be analysed by computer software.

After the assessment, we will talk with you about whether voice training will be helpful.

Voice and Communication Training

Before beginning voice training it is important that you have a strong and stable voice system. Some areas you may first work on include (but are not limited to):

- Vocal health
- Stretching/relaxation
- Efficient breathing for voice change
- Specific exercises to increase the range, flexibility and stamina of your voice.

Once you have an efficient and strong voice system it is time to learn the voice and communication techniques.

This will include pitch and resonance change exercises that require daily home practice. Other aspects of verbal and nonverbal communication may also be addressed. The time it takes to learn these techniques varies for each person, however you should allow approximately 10-12 weeks.

Group Days

Group days provide you with the opportunity to return to the clinic following the completion of your voice training should you wish to practice any of your techniques in a safe space with others. Group days are optional and are held regularly through the year. During group days you will receive individual attention plus the opportunity to practice in small and large groups with others who have completed voice training.
